Stroke

A stroke is the rapid loss of brain function caused by a disturbance in blood supply, either a blockage (ischemia) or leakage (hemorrhage). When brain cells are deprived of blood, some die immediately, and others remain at risk of death for several hours but can be saved with prompt treatment.

Symptoms of stroke include:

- Dizziness and loss of balance or coordination
- Difficulty with speaking and understanding
- Paralysis or numbness on one side of your body or face. If you try to raise both arms over your head and one begins to fall, you may be having a stroke.
- Vision problems
- Sudden, severe headache
